uhm, I dont know about other email clients but mozilla colorizes previous email content and makes fonts smaller, this way you actually know what is quoted and what is new. Same thing with pine (colorizing that is, it does not make fonts smaller). Actually, even if I were to use pop3 through telnet it would not be hard to see quoted parts, they usually start with ">", unless someone sends html only mail (ugh).

Its no longer a concious effort to see actual reply vs quoted reply, just like typing is not concious effort anymore, fingers caress the keyboard themselves.

top posting also asks for people to reply to points without quoting the point, how I hate reading emails that go:

  ) 1 yes
  ) 2 no
  ) 3 maybe ) ) from other
  ) ) 1. what about
  ) ) 2. when if
  ) ) 3. also how

now, those are hard to read, its alot easier to follow:
)) 1. what about
) yes
)) 2. when if
) no
)) 3. also how ) maybe

exactly, and people that dont trim should be beaten almost hard as people who top post.. ;D

Similiarly long sigs are bad. anything beyond 4 lines I would call bad, seen 30line sig, ugh.

/apz, I post in reverse: first sig, then reply, then quote past message
